

Design Type: Manifesting Generator

A Manifesting Generator has a defined sacral center (red square in the center) and a defined throat connected to one of the four motors through continuous definition. Manifesting Generators are 33% of the population.

You are a type of Generator (most common type) called a Manifesting Generator. With your throat connected to a motor, you can act but only once your sacral motor has responded. You can initiate conversation and action based on how your motor(s) are defined to your throat.

As a Generator type you are here to work and you are here to do the "right" work. The "right" work depends on how your sacral motor responds to being available. The sacral motor is your "gut" response mechanism. It is the key to your power. It is your navigation tool for making powerful choices in your life with clarity and correctness. Just like a car needs a key to turn it on, the sacral motor is turned on by two non-verbal sounds. Those two sounds are Uh-huh and Un-un. When you respond with these sounds you access your power and bring a level of energetic commitment that otherwise would not be available.

You carry a lot of power and are confident in your ability to do things. You also can feel limited and stuck at times. This brings anger and frustration which is the theme of a Manifesting Generator. Your greatest challenge will be to learn patience. This is where your strategy supports you. If you will learn to wait for something to respond to, your life will not meet resistance and interference of others trying to stop, control you or tell you what to do.

Your response process requires a number of steps in understanding its availability. Like a Generator you must honor your non-verbal sacral response to generate. And, rather than moving to generate, your process is to image the response as an action or feeling and if it doesn't feel correct, revise your response. Only when a response is "tried on" can you move forward in your Manifesting strategy and inform others or be informed before you act. As a Manifesting Generator you are independent and don't like to be told what to do. Life will flow better for you if you inform and are informed.

So, hold back from taking action too quickly once you feel that gut response. Imagine yourself in that situation and revisit your gut response from that place. You will know if your response is correct. This is how you "test drive" your response. You may appear to others that you are jumping around with things or can't make up your mind but this is how you "try" things on first. This is correct for you, as long as you follow your "gut" response and use your sacral sounds as your strategy
